THE Mexican embassy was completely embowered with Easter lilies and white roses against a background of palms, ferns and southern smilax for the marriage at noon today of Senorita Maria Amalia Bonillas, daughter of the Mexican ambassador to the United States and Senora Yencio Bonillas, and Lieut. Giuseppe Coppola of the royal Italian army, now stationed in New York with the Italian military mission.
A brilliant gathering of diplomats, including the Spanish ambassador and Mme. Riano, the Japanese ambassador and Viscountess Ishii, the Chilean ambassador and Senora de Mathieu, Latin American countries now in Washington, together with many officials and representatives of the smart resident circle in the capital, assembled in the ballroom, where the ceremony was performed by Mr. Thomas S. Lee, rector of St. Matthew's Church.
The mirrored walls of this beautiful room, which has been the scene of many notable gatherings from the time of the occupancy of the embassy by the first ambassador from Mexico, Senor Romero, to the present incumbent, were veiled in smilax and asparagus vine.
The tower of palms and echeveria fern, where the ceremony was performed, was studded with Easter lilies and great clusters of these flowers, together with white roses, were arranged in vases about the various rooms. A stringed orchestra playing behind a screen of smilax heralded

SIGNORA GIUSEPPE COPPOLA, Formerly Senorita Maria Amalia Bonillas, daughter of the Ambassador of Mexico and Senora Bonillas, whose marriage took place today.

The coming of the bride with the wedding search and the bridal procession passing down the wide staircase crossed the hall and walked the length of the ballroom to the improvised altar where the bridegroom and his best man, Mr. Tomi of New York, who acted by proxy for Lieut. Coppola of the royal Italian mission, awaited them.
The ambassador escorted the bride, who made a charming picture in her gown of ivory-tinted duchess satin made on slightly draped lines with a rather short skirt of the satin lengthened with a deep transparent hem of tulle. The bodice of exquisite duchess lace mounted over satin extended to the hip line, where one side draperies of crystal and pearl embroidered tulle were attached, a garland of tiny orange blossoms marking the joining.
Square panels of tulle heavily incrustated in pearls and crystals at the back and front and falling to the hem were cut in deep Vs from the shoulders to the hip line to show the lace bodice beneath, and the sleeves were of tulle edged at the wrist with pearls.
Her court train of satin, unusually long and narrow, was lined with finely shirred chiffon, and a spray of orange blossoms showed on the square end.
Her tulle veil, draped very simply, was caught across the back of the coiffure with a half chapelet of orange blossoms, and she carried a sheath of Easter lilies and gardenias.
Senora de Rojo, wife of the counselor of the Mexican embassy, and who became a bride a little more than a year ago in the same ballroom, attended her sister as matron of honor. Her gown, the embodiment of a springing model, was drawn in green gros de londre made with a tight draped bodice, having elbow-length train, front of fine blue onyx, and a circular ruffle. The décollete, cut square in the front and in a V at the back, had a true lovers' knot of French blue ribbon beneath one shoulder catching the self-toned chiffon, which softened the edge.
The skirt made very bouffant at the top had a garland of tiny French blue and pale pink ribbon flowers marking its widest part and caught here and there with a true lovers' knot of French blue ribbon. The lower part of the skirt was long and tight, showing a slight drapery at one side.
Her large picture hat of Nile green chiffon was faced with pale pink chiffon, and a plume of French blue ostrich covered the crown and fell at the left side.
She carried a bouquet of the palest pink roses.
As the bride and bridegroom left the altar the bride under the drawn swords of the officers of the royal Italian military mission, who stood at either side of the aisle, the bride, as is the Mexican custom, wore the Mexican minister of finance, Senor Rafael Nieto, the former secretary of foreign relations in Mexico, Gen. Candido Aguilar, and Gen. Juan Barragan, President Carranza's chief of staff, who were unable to be present, but were represented by the following: Gen. Dr. Alfredo Caturrell, Gen. Emilio Salinas, Mexican consul general in New York, and Senor Felipe del Hoyo of Mexico City.
The ambassador and Senora Bonillas assisted Lieut. and Signora Coppola in receiving and at the breakfast which followed. Senora Bonillas wore a very smart afternoon gown of mauve chiffon over mauve satin, made on train, with a belt of rare point applique lace which outlined the décollete and fell in a cascade from waist to hem at one side of the skirt.
She wore a large black tulle hat trimmed with plumes and a corsage bouquet of orchids.
There were about 150 guests at the buffet breakfast, among whom were many young friends of the bride, who is a great favorite in society here.

Lieut. Coppola and his bride left this afternoon for a short wedding trip, the latter wearing a tailored suit of navy blue tricot, made on very straight, simple lines, with a small blue straw hat trimmed with an Alsatian bow of blue ribbon.
They will spend a few weeks in New York before sailing for Italy.
There were many guests present at the ceremony from Boston and New York, among them Signor Cerutti, chief of the royal Italian military mission, and all the members of the mission, who came on from New York to do honor to the bridegroom of today, who is one of their brother officers.

TO FLY ACROSS THE OCEAN.
Seaplanes Being Prepared for Navy's Transatlantic Trial.
Several seaplanes of the N-C type are being prepared for transatlantic flight to be undertaken soon by the Navy Department, although no decision has been reached as to the number that will make the start. Four of these big craft have been completed and it may be that two and possibly even three will be sent out on the theory that the greater the number the greater the chances of success.
The Navy Department is not now contemplating a transatlantic flight with a lighter-than-air machine. Acting Secretary Roosevelt said today the Navy had no dirigible capable of making such a voyage.
